WELBORN WAS FIRST COUNTY SEAT SITE

From "COFFEE GROUNDS" History of Coffee County by Fred Watson

The question of the location of the county seat town, the tea were to be sold to the highest bidder. After the sale of the appointed commissioners lots they were required to select, on or before the first day of March of that year, "forty acres of land, which were within one mile of the center of Coffee County, which when selected shall be the permanent site or seat of justice for said county." As is no exact knowledge that soon as the selection was made the commissioners were required to have the town surveyed and laid off into convenient lots, "sub-coming in from Georgia and other southeastern States. The Indian wars were still fresh in the minds of the people, and it was natural that the county and county seat should have been named after two heroes of these wars, General John Coffee for whom the county was named, served under General Andrew Jackson, during the Creek Indian War of 1813-14. The first county seat of Coffee County was named Welborn, after General William Welborn, who was one of the Alabama Commanders in the Creek Indian War of 1836-37.

The old courthouse was located about twelve miles west of Enterprise, and one mile east of the present Damascus Baptist Church. About the time that the county seat was set up at Welborn, many settlers were moving in and around what was Elba. These settlers "up on the river," as they were called, wanted the courthouse moved there, while the settlers in "the pine woods," wanted it to remain at Welborn.

The courthouse at Welborn was destroyed by fire in March, 1851, and the legislature on February 5, 1852, required the probate judge to procure suitable and separate books in which to record anew all deeds, marriage licenses, and all other papers required by law to be recorded, which may be deposited in the office for that purpose. The same legislature, December 16, 1851, authorized the judge of probate and the commissioners of roads and revenue, to levy a tax, not exceeding fifty percent of the State tax "for the express purpose of building a new courthouse and purchase of land in and for said county."

The story still persists that the burning of the courthouse was arson, as most of the people were not satisfied with its location. There is nothing to support this story, for charges were not brought against anyone. It was the intention of the legislature for the new courthouse to be built at the location where the old one burned. The people had never been satisfied with the location of the county seat and did not wish for it to be rebuilt at Welborn. The legislature had arbitrarily stated that the county seat should be close to the center of the county without taking into consideration the wishes of the people or that fact that the center area was the most sparsely settled in the county. Most of the people lived in the northern part, centered around Elba, at the junction of the Pea River, and around Indigo Head (Clintonsville) located at Township five, range twenty-one, section thirteen and situated, as was Elba, on the main east and west road.

Due to the opposition to rebuilding the courthouse at the relatively inaccessible Welborn, the legislature, on January 30, 1852, passed an act directing the sheriff to hold an election on the first Monday in August, 1852, to determine the permanent location of the courthouse.

The election was authorized to select one of the towns of Elba or Indigo Head (Clintonsville). The town receiving the majority of votes was to be the county seat provided the citizens of the town should build a good and substantial courthouse and jail free of charge to the county.

Then came the day to vote. Settlers flocked into the villages, or settlements to decide the future location of the Coffee County courthouse. The settlers "up the river," outnumbered the "pine woods" voters, so they cast a larger number of votes, and the courthouse was moved to its present site of Elba.

On October 5, 1852, they held and assigned the ceremony of the election. It read thus: "We, James D. McClean, sheriff of Coffee County, and W. Garrett and John L. Benton, managers of the election held yesterday at Welborn, the courthouse of Coffee County, and the different precincts in said county, do hereby certify that the following is a correct statement of the result of said election for the permanent seat of justice of Coffee County, Under an act of last session of the legislature of the State of Alabama, upon consolidating the returns from the several precincts of said county, viz: Elba has 491 votes, Indigo Head 433 votes, which gives Elba 58 votes majority, and we therefore declare Elba to be elected."

Witness our hands and seals this fifth day of October, A.D., 1852, It took eleven years for Elba to be elected. the people of Coffee County to agree upon a permanent site for the county seat. John Clayton was the first Probate Judge of Coffee County. He was elected in 1850, and served until 1855, and was succeeded by P.D. Costello.

After the county seat had been moved to Elba, the county sold the old county seat property at Welborn to William Peacock. There were forty acres in the plot which sold for two hundred and ten dollars.

Information gathered from various sources leads us to believe that the early settlers had begun to drift into the old settlement at Welborn, many years before the courthouse was put there. The name given to the settlement was "Burnt Bull," but after the courthouse was located there the name was changed to Welborn.

The Peacocks moved there from Georgia. Shortly after William Peacock moved to Welborn, he returned to Georgia, his native state, on a business trip. While there he became ill and died. Due to the poor transportation in those days, his body could not be returned, so he was buried in Georgia. His widow, Hanna, and most of his children remained in Coffee County the rest of their lives. The Peacocks bought all the land around the old site of Welborn. The Peacock cemetery still remains at the site of the forgotten village. It is among the older cemeteries in this part of the county. It is said that many more of the early settlers were buried in the cemetery, but because there were no markers over the graves, they became lost and have been plowed over many years by those tending the farm, on which the old graveyard is located.

The Peacock tombstones stand "huddled" in the field. They were hewed from limestone obtained from nearby Welborn creek. The inscriptions on these tombstones are still visible, even though some of them have been standing over a century. The inscription upon one of the graves reads, "Hanna Peacock, Born January 17, 1795 - Departed February 17, 1867 - age 72 years."

Nothing remains today, at the site of Welborn, the site of Coffee County's first courthouse, but the old Peacock cemetery, located in a peanut field, owned today by Rowe Bowers.

advantage of it or not. Much depends on the amount of time a shopper has and her available storage space. Her interest in food preparation and the accessibility of stores also have an effect. While an item is featured as a special, always check the price against other similar items. Be careful of sizes. A lower price on a smaller quantity doesn't always mean a good buy.

NEWS & CHAT

BY: SARAH HUTCHISON

SAFETY
The kitchen is one of the most popular areas of a home, but it can also be one of the most hazardous. Kitchens accidents include burns, scalds, cuts and falls. Homemakers should take steps to prevent such home mishaps. Here are some tips to prevent accidents.

When using a knife, choose the proper one for the job, and always cut away from yourself. Store knives in drawers or on wall racks with handles forward and out of reach of children. Wash and dry them separately, keeping the sharp edge away from hands.

A common injury is cutting a finger while grating food. By wearing washable work gloves and using a grater with drilled rather than punched holes, injury can be prevented in most cases.

Cooking pots should be well balanced so they will stand without tipping. They should have firmly attached handles that will not get hot. Chipped, cracked or rusty pots should be thrown out because they are dangerous. When cooking, keep pot handles turned in so that there is less chance of spilling and less chance of small children grabbing them.

If grease or fat catches fire, smother it at once with a metal cover or pour lots of salt or baking powder over the flame. Never use water on a grease fire because it will spread the fire.

It's a good idea to keep a small fire extinguisher in a handy place near the kitchen in case of an emergency.

OKRA
Okra is one of the favorite vegetables in our country. It is used in many ways—fried, boiled, pickled and in soup mixtures. Okra should be harvested every other day. If you allow it to fully mature on the stalk, it will quit bearing. If you are going on an extended vacation, it is a good idea to let a neighbor pick the okra so it will keep bearing.

During periods of high humidity and rain, we hear complaints that okra pods rot and don't fill out. Usually, the bloom sticks firmly to the young pod and all of it rots. Normally, this will stop when the weather gets dry and the humidity is lowered.

If okra sheds most of its leaves and begins to be spotted, there is a 40% chance that nematodes are present. Pull up such plants and look at the roots. If they are badly shaped and have knots all over them, you will know you have nematodes. Areas where nematodes are present should be treated before planting the crops another year. All gardens should be soil tested for nematodes.

TABLE SALT
Oftentimes while barbecuing, the coals will get too hot. A handful of salt thrown on the coals will lower the flames and deaden the smoke from the ground when other flowers are scarce.
